and live stock is moving in such a way that it is almost impossible to take care of it. Shipping is curtafled, and the question arises. What can be done with the grain and the meat?

On the other hand the Food Adminis tration is urging the observance of conservation week in all sections of the country and in all ways, with a new programme of conservation for hotels and new saving plans, which it insists muts be carried out in order to meet the This condition is imperative if the war is to continue, and doubly so if peace is to come. It is necessary to ship everything possible in the way of grain and meats this year. The plan calls for shipments of over 17,000,000 tons of odstuffs, or 5,000,000 tons of last year, and this enormous supply, outside of the increase in the wheat crop, can only be obtained by the saving. It may be weeks—possibly months—before the supply of ships needed for the army can be turned back into food channels again, but the longer those vessels re held out for the military programme the greater is the absolute need of ship-ping the supplies from North America, as there will not be time nor ships to any way to the neutral countries it will materially increase the demand upon North America, while there is no place for the starved countries of central Europe to get any supplies except from North America. There is little incentive in asking peo ple to save to feed the Germans, but even if they are not fed there is a tre-mendous demand from the Allies and neutrals to be met. With the allied rements 5,000,000 tons more than last year, at the minimum, any increase in the neutral plans would be just so much further drain on the American supplies,
